CONTENT

Actelion's primary role is the research, development and commercialization of innovative medicines to help treat serious, life-threatening diseases with high unmet medical need. We do this in a responsible and ethical manner and with a commitment to sustainable development respecting the needs of the individual, the society and the environment.

We believe that a sound approach to energy management is important. It is important not only for our own growth and profitability, but also to those with whom we share demand for renewable and nonrenewable resources around the globe.

Through management leadership and employee participation, Actelion will:

- Create an environmentally sustainable workplace.
- Comply with applicable laws and regulations, and conform to the Actelion's health and safety requirements.
- Integrate environmental considerations into business planning, decision making and daily activities.
- Reduce pollution through reduction, reuse and recycling wherever possible.
- Conscientiously manage emissions and waste.
- Establish appropriate targets and objectives to improve our impact on the environment.
- Actelion is investigating offsetting a portion of its emissions of GHGs in certain circumstances particularly when it can be demonstrated that such emissions are unavoidable. Such offsets would only be via investments in energy efficiency projects which offer sustainable development benefits that have been verified by independent third parties.

Looking after the world we live in is a shared responsibility, and all our colleagues are responsible and accountable for our performance. All Actelion staff are expected to understand and comply with our commitment to the environment and are encouraged to actively participate in its continuous improvement.
